Editorial Review

From the Author

When it comes to law enforcement, Washington DC is its own local municipal entity, as well as being its own Federal jurisdiction, of course. It's also ten minutes away from two different U.S. states, which have their own state and local authorities despite being less than 10 miles from the White House.

Blueblood occurred to me one night when I was listening to the local Washington DC news describing a car chase that involved half a dozen of these different jurisdictions before the bad guy was caught.

Now, I thought, what would happen if the crime were more heinous, yet occurred in all these different areas? What if the crime was the worst imaginable: a serial killer? What if the killer had a beef with police? And Blueblood was born.

About the Author

Matthew Iden writes fantasy, science fiction, horror, thrillers, crime fiction, and contemporary literary fiction with a psychological twist.

An eclectic resume—he's held jobs with the US Postal Service, international non-profit groups, a short stint with the Forest Service in Sitka, Alaska and time with the globe-spanning Semester at Sea program—has given him inspiration for short stories and novel ideas, while trips to Iceland, Patagonia, and Antarctica haven't hurt in the creative juices department, either. A post-graduate education in English Literature wasn't necessary, but it helped define what he didn't want to do with his life and let him read a great deal of good books.
